The siege of the city of Leyden (Leiden) in the Netherlands resulted in the depletion of the supply of silver for coins and thus emergency coinage was instigated. This siege money was issued initially on clipped diamond shaped planchets using the die of the 1574 coin as offered above but when silver was exhausted paper was used in the form of cardboard with exactly the same design as the 1574 twenty stuiver. See Noble Numismatics Sale 87 lot 2960 for an emergency paper issue of this design.

Boordgeld (board-money/ship money) consisted of metal and paper tokens issued by many Dutch shipping lines from 1946 through the mid-1970s. These tokens were used because of post war restrictions on foreign exchange and also to have a uniform system of currency because of the problems of many non-Dutch crew members trying to convert foreign currency tendered by passengers. On boarding passengers exchanged their currency for the ship board tokens (Boordgeld) which were the only form of currency accepted on board Dutch ships. Paper tokens were issued initially but later withdrawn and replaced by the metallic tokens.
