Like the Prince of Wales in 1920, the next Royal visitors, travelled on HMS Renown. This time it was the second son of King George V and Queen Mary, Prince Albert Frederick Arthur George (1895-1952), Duke of York.

The Duke and Duchess of York left England on 6 January 1927 and arrived at Auckland on 22 February. After two days of deep-sea fishing in the Bay of Islands, they returned to Auckland to go by rail and motorcar to Rotorua where the First World War memorial to the Arawas was unveiled. On the way south to Wellington they visited most of the larger North Island towns, with a second rest period when the Royal couple and only a minimum of staff spent two days in trout fishing from a camp at Kowhai Flat, Tokaanu.

At Wellington the Duchess opened the new Karitane Home, which she was to revisit 30 years later on her second tour. Meanwhile the Duke paid an unscheduled visit to workers' homes in the Hutt Valley and was shown over woollen mills. He showed great interest in factories, several of which he inspected in New Zealand. Following a four-day stay at Wellington, the Duke and Duchess boarded Renown for Picton whence they drove to Nelson. It was here that the Duchess was taken ill with tonsillitis and forced to abandon the remainder of her New Zealand itinerary.

The Duke went on alone, travelling by road and rail to the West Coast and Christchurch where he received the freedom of the city. He also had an excursion further afield and visited the southern lakes. The Dunedin programme included the unveiling of the war memorial and the opening of the Sargood now Dunedin, Art Gallery. The Duke then proceeded to Invercargill and Bluff where he joined the Duchess on Renown, departing for Australia on 22 March. Weather conditions were so bad that the transfer to the visiting battleship had to be made by tug and not through HMS Diomede as planned.

On the abdication of Edward VIII in 1936, the Duke and Duchess came to the throne as George VI and Queen Elizabeth.

The following courtesy of Huw Richards and ESPN:

"A crowd variously estimated at 21-25,000 crammed in what one report described as 'uncomfortable confusion' into Athletic Park, Wellington on August 13 1904 -- the effort of transporting them over-stretching Wellington's new electric trams. Bedell-Sivright, wearing a top hat, watched from a grandstand whose occupants also included New Zealand Premier Billy Seddon, first in a line of large-bodied, larger than life populists who have occupied the post, who had entertained the team at a reception on the previous Thursday.

The All Blacks included seven new caps including skipper Billy Stead at first five-eighth and dynamic forward Charlie 'Bronco' Seeling, destined for a great career in rugby league, but had a solid core of understanding built up on the Australian tour a year earlier. They had been training together, under the supervision of coach Jimmy Duncan, for the previous week. Other names which still resonate include loose forward (in fact an auxiliary half-back in the New Zealand formation of seven forwards and eight backs) Dave Gallaher, and the wings Billy Wallace and Duncan McGregor.

The All Blacks had the better of the first half, but kicker Wallace, usually lethally accurate, admitted to being so nervous that 'I could not see the posts, I was shaking all over' and missed two chances before finally landing one three minutes before half-time. From the restart a break by Morgan, captain in Bedell-Sivright's absence, led to a penalty which London Welshman Arthur Harding landed for the tourists, making it 3-3 at the break.

At half-time the All Blacks resolved to keep it tight and rely on their forward power, with their seven men -- specialists in their roles -- more than holding their own against an eight which was short on quality and top-level experience as well as packing down for scrums in the order in which they arrived. Two tries by McGregor sealed their 9-3 victory, leading one New Zealand paper to editorialise that 'Rugby is King', a position which it has arguably retained for 113 years and counting."

Ernest (Ernie) Edward Booth, nicknamed 'General' after the Salvation Army founder (born 24 February 1876 in Teschemakers, New Zealand) was a New Zealand rugby union footballer. He was a member of the 1905 'Original' All Blacks. He won his first Test cap for New Zealand on 1 January 1906 against France. In total he played 3 Tests over a period from 1906 to 1907. He died in Christchurch in 1935.

(The following courtesy of Wikipedia): The Original All Blacks (also known simply as 'The Originals') were the first New Zealand national rugby union team to tour outside Australasia. They toured the British Isles, France and the United States of America during 1905-1906. Their opening game was against Devon on 16 September 1905 whom they defeated 55-4. Such was the surprise that some newspapers in Britain printed that Devon had scored 55 points and not the All Blacks. They went on to defeat every English side that they faced, including a 16-3 victory over English county champions Durham, and a 32-0 victory over Blackheath. They defeated Scotland, Ireland and England with the closest of the three matches their 12-7 victory over Scotland. The team's only loss of the tour was a 3-0 defeat by Wales at Cardiff Arms Park. The loss was highly controversial wing Bob Deans claimed to have scored a try that would have brought them level. However, in truth Wales were generally considered the better team with the All Blacks playing particularly poorly in the first half of the game. They managed narrow wins against the Welsh club teams and went on to play France in France's first ever Test match. They returned to New Zealand via North America where they played two matches against Canadian teams. Overall they played a total of thirty-five matches, which included five Tests, and only lost once-the defeat by Wales.

The following courtesy of National Library of New Zealand, Papers Past, from the "New Zealand Times" 5 June 1917:-

"It had been the great ambition of the New Zealand team to make a trip to England to play the famous, and up till then unbeaten Army Service team, and also to play a match against Wales, but the exigencies of war barred the way.

As some solace for this disappointment, however, a match was played in Paris between a team representing New Zealand, and one representing France. This match, arranged by the proprietors of the well-known French newspaper "Le Journal" and L'Union des Societies Francaise de Sports Athletiques, assumed the importance of an international event, and drew an enormous concourse of 60,000 people to the ground at Vincennes, just outside the gates of Paris. This attendance is supposed to be a world's record for a Rugby football match. Members of the French Ministry, British and French generals, and representatives of such far-apart countries as America, Russia, Roumania, and Montenegro were present.

The teams were New Zealand- Full-back: Bombardier H.W.Adams; three-quarters, Sergeant E.Ryan, Sergeant G.Murray (captain), Corporal G.Owles; five-eighths, Private N.F.Stead, Bombardier G.C.McIntyre; half, Sapper G.Brown; wing, Lance Corporal R.Taylor; forwards, Privates R.Fogarty, G.Whittington, A.Wilson, Gunner L.Cockcroft, Private G.King, Lance-Corporal J.Moffatt, Private T.French.

France - Full-back, Second-Lieutenant Bechade; three-quarters, Corporal Juppe, Aide-Major Jaureguy, Adjutant Pilote Aviateur Strohl, Lieutenant le Fozieres; halves, Mar.Logis Pilote Aviateur Boyau (capitane), Second-Lieutenant Bascou; forwards, S.Lieutenant Fellonneau, Sergeant Jules Forgues, Second-Lieutenant de Beyssac, Mar.Logis Arnal. Motoc. Manniot, Capitane Eluere, Aide-Major Favre. Mar. Logis Rouzies.

Twenty-three French generals were written to, and gave their consent to officers and men leaving the front to take part in the match. Several of the French players had taken part in an attack against the Germans on the preceding day. Captain Eluere had been in a "tank" in an engagement at 5.30pm on the preceding day. Boyau, the captain of the team, had brought down no fewer than seventeen German aeroplanes. The other aviators had each two or three enemy planes to their credit. Every man in the team had come straight from the front.

As the teams filed on to the ground the enthusiasm of the crowd knew no bounds. The band played the Marsellaise and the grave notes of "God Save the King," and the flags of the Allies fluttered bravely in the breeze. I was unable myself to go to Paris to see the match, but I gather from those who were present that the play was quite interesting, and that the score is scarcely an indication of the excellent fight put up by the French team.

The New Zealanders were, as usual, slow in getting to work, and in the first spell they put on only eleven points, in the second spell they showed a decided superiority in passing and in the finer points of the game.

Experts say that since the All Blacks visited Paris some ten years ago there has been a great improvement, in French Rugby play, and that the New Zealand team in this match showed that they were better than any that had visited Paris except the All Blacks, and, possibly the South Africans.

Of late years the French have been in the habit of playing four International matches each year, against England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, and generally they manage to win one of these matches, so it may be conceded that their standard of play is a pretty high one.

ENTHUSIASTIC RECEPTION.

The reception of the team at the match and generally in the few days they were in Paris was extraordinarily enthusiastic. They were there at a memorable time. The news of the declaration of war against Germany by the United States of America had come to hand, and in honour of the event the tricolour was fluttering in every street in Paris and in the streets of every town and village behind the battle zone in France. And in addition the British, in the great battle of Arras, had just proved, for the second time, that they were capable of smashing the flower of the German Army in Northern France.

Enthusiasm in the cause of the Allies had reached a high pitch. When, finally, the New Zealand team had lined up and gave a performance of the wild Maori war dance, the "haka" roars of laughter and cheering resounded from all parts of the ground.

Afterwards the French journals described how the strange rhythm of the dance was taken up from the captain by the rest of the team with expressive motions and the beating of hands and feet and loud and sharp cries, "As the men take up the chorus," one writer said, "the public acclaim our guests, who, without losing time, begin to give forth their terrible "Komati-Komati-Kaourah." A few moments later the French team entered the field and received in its turn as warm a greeting as its rivals. "Bravo les poilus," frantically shouted the spectators, for they were in truth poilus, and real ones, those footballers in red stockings, for several of them, for instance the young Captain Eluero, on the very eve of the match had taken part in an attack against the Germans.

At the conclusion of the game the French team rushed to the New Zealanders and in a trice they had stripped off their jerseys and exchanged them for their own.

The journey from the gates back to Paris was in the nature of a triumphal procession. The crowds again gave vent to their enthusiasm, and women rushed forward and kissed the New Zealand heroes. In Paris the members of the team were feted right loyally. They were banqueted by "Le Journal," invited to the clubs, and had seats reserved for them at the theatres. The "Journal" proprietors presented them with a spirited statuette in bronze, "Le Lancenr de Grenades" by the sculptor Chauvel, a Salon exhibitor, designed whilst he himself was in the trenches. This "Coupe de la Somme," as it has been named, is indeed an interesting trophy to take back across the seas to New Zealand. It is perhaps the most unique memento of our participation, in the war. In addition each one of the "athletes and heroes" received a beautiful medallion in frosted silver, on which is the famous figure in relief of La Marsellaise from the Arc de Triomphe. They also were given tinder boxes of solid gold or gold and silver. Those also were from "Le Journal." Other journals, including the "Daily Mail" and "Sporting," likewise entertained the New Zealanders. They had the time of their lives, and New Zealand got an advertisement second only to the part it has taken in the war in this generous country."

Note: The date of play and the score were not mentioned in the above article but it is believed to be the match played on 8 April 1917, the score being 40:0 to New Zealand.

E. Stewart played for Waihou Football Club and also was selected to represent in the Piako Rugby Union team.

Leslie Frank Cupples (8 February 1898 - 10 August 1972).

Born and educated in Otautau, Cupples, who had won the Military Medal in World War I, was a farmer at Tokaanu from where he won selection for the East Taupo sub-union and Bay of Plenty from 1920-23. He came to national prominence with his game for Bay of Plenty against the 1921 Springboks, some South Africans describing him as "the best forward in New Zealand".

Les Cupples was rewarded the following season with selection for the North Island and then in the All Blacks side that played three games in New Zealand and five in Australia.

The following season he played against the visiting New South Wales side and a year later was chosen for the 1924/5 tour of the United Kingdom, France and Canada after an impressive final trial. Though his selection was not universally popular Cupples had a successful tour, playing in 18 of the 32 matches. On tour he played in the tests against Ireland and Wales, won 6-0 and 19-0 respectively, and scored his only try against Leicester.

A very strong and fit loose forward Cupples, remembered by players of his day as a dedicated footballer who did his training before breakfast, stood 6' 3" (1.91m) with a playing weight of about 14 stone (89kg).

On returning to New Zealand he played out the 1925 season for his club and sub union before retiring.

In all he played 29 games for New Zealand but a mere 6 for Bay of Plenty, a reflection of the limited programme undertaken by rural unions at that time.

His most memorable provincial game was the 1922 Ranfurly Shield challenge against Hawkes Bay, lost 16-17 after the Bay of Plenty halfback missed a conversion from in front of the posts right on full time.

1924-25 New Zealand rugby union tour of Britain, Ireland and France (Courtesy Wikipedia - the free encyclopedia):

The Invincibles was a nickname given to the 1924-25 New Zealand rugby union team which toured the United Kingdom, Ireland, France and Canada. The team was captained by Cliff Porter, and numbered among its top players George Nepia and brothers Cyril and Maurice Brownlie. During the test against England Cyril Brownlie was sent off by the Welsh referee Albert Freethy, the first player to be sent off from a test.

Between September 1924 and February 1925, the team played 32 games including four test matches, one each against Ireland, England, Wales, and France. They won all 32 games, scoring 838 points and only having 116 points scored against them.

Cliff Porter was tour captain, but played only 17 of the 32 games due to injury, including just one test (against France). During the remaining games, tour vice-captain Johnstone Richardson (Jock) took over the captaincy.

Ian Hamilton Harvey (1 January 1903 - 22 October 1966).

Ian Harvey, one of New Zealand's leading forwards of the 1920s, went on three tours with the All Blacks, but had so much bad luck with injuries and illness that he must have thought he was jinxed.

Because of bouts of tonsillitis he had just eight matches with the Invincibles on the 1924-25 tour of Britain and France. He suffered the same frustrations on the 1928 tour of South Africa playing only in four matches, three of them towards the end of the itinerary. However, there was some consolation in South Africa for he was brought into the fourth test at lock.

What was to be his one and only test cap was marked by a notable All Black performance: a 13-5 victory which drew the series and was to be the best result for the All Blacks on tour in South Africa until 1996 when finally the Springboks were beaten in a rubber on their home soil.

Harvey's other tour, the only one which was not affected by health problems, was to Australia in 1926 when he played in six of the eight matches, including the three unofficial internationals against the New South Wales Waratahs.

Had it not been for his tour illnesses Harvey might well have been acclaimed as one of the giants of New Zealand's golden era of the 1920s.

Almost 1.86m tall and more than 95kg he was a big man for the times and a strong, hard working forward well suited to the locking position in the 2-3-2 scrum.

He also had a measure of athleticism, having started his representative career as a fullback. This was in the 1922 season when he was aged 19 but he had an unfortunate debut and was not re-selected until the following season.

By now a shortage of top class forwards in Wairarapa led to Harvey, with his imposing physique, being shifted to the pack where he proved to be an instant success, playing for Wairarapa-Bush in their 14-8 defeat of the touring New South Wales side.

He developed so rapidly that after the national trials of 1924 he was among the first players selected for the tour, being included among 16 "certainties" before the trials had been completed. In 1924 he also made the first of his three appearances for the North Island.

Harvey played until the 1930 season, bringing his first class tally of matches to 69, including 37 for Wairarapa and 18 for the All Blacks.

His last major match was for a combined Wairarapa-Bush selection which lost to the touring Great Britain side 19-6.

The 1969 Wales rugby union tour was a series of rugby union games undertaken by the Wales national rugby union team to Australia, Fiji and New Zealand. The tour took in four matches against regional and invitational teams and three tests; two to New Zealand and one to Australia. This was the second official Wales tour to the southern hemisphere and the first to Australasia and Melanesia.

The tour results were mixed for Wales; the team was unbeaten in the non-test matches and were victorious over Australia, but were completely out-classed by New Zealand. The captaincy of the tour was given to Newport's Brian Price.

In the first year (2006) the IRB Pacific Five Nations did not include Australia. Australia had been invited to take part in the inaugural 2006 tournament but decided against sending a team stating that they wanted to focus on their domestic competition. The inaugural tournament kicked-off 3 June 2006 and was played in a round-robin format, with some games being held in Australia.

The Junior All Blacks won all of their matches en route to winning the 2006 tournament. The inaugural tournament was a success in providing a platform for Pacific nations and Japan in gaining valuable exposure.

Queen Victoria School for Maori Girls was opened on 6 April 1903. It was proposed to establish an Anglican boarding school for Maori Girls in Auckland as a memorial to Queen Victoria who died in 1901. The cause was championed by Lady Ranfurly, wife of the Governor, and Reverend FA Bennett travelled the country promoting the idea. The foundation stone was laid by the Duchess of York on 12 June 1901 (later Queen Mary). Money for the school was raised by donations, subscription and through bazaars, also the government funded 20 scholarships.

"The death in action, on October 9, is reported of Sergeant-Major E.E.Crawshaw, the well-known Canterbury representative footballer and cricketer. He was 29 years of age and the son of Mr T.B.Crawshaw, of the firm of Aulsebrooks, Ltd. For six years he attended the Christchurch 'Boys' High School, during which period he was prominently associated with all sides of school life. He was senior monitor in 1908, and was the first to win the Deans Memorial Scholarship. For three years he captained the school first fifteen at football and the first eleven at cricket. Whilst still at school he was selected to represent his province at cricket. After leaving school he entered the office of Messrs Godfrey and Tayler and qualified as an accountant. He then was a member of the St Albans Cricket Club, and captained the Old Boys' Rugby first fifteen. He represented his province at football in 1911, 1912 and 1913. Later he removed to Rangiora, where he carried on his profession as an accountant, also acting as secretary to the Northern A. and P. Association, the Sefton Dairy Company, and the Canterbury Dairy Produce Company, and as representative of the Christchurch Press Company. The deceased left New Zealand with the 36th Reinforcement, and while in England participated actively in field sports, acting as captain of the Sling team against Codford. He leaves a widow (a daughter of the late Colonel F.W.Francis, V.D.), and a young child. The flag was flown at half-mast at the Boys' High School to-day as a mark of respect to his memory, whilst at a special parade the "Last Post" was sounded by the School buglers."

53906 Company Sergeant Major Ernest Elgood Crawshaw, 36th Reinforcements, D Company, NZEF, embarked from New Zealand 2 May 1918, Killed in Action, France, 9 October 1918.

The following courtesy Erik Olssen. 'Deans, Robert George', first published in the Dictionary of New Zealand Biography, vol. 3, 1996. Te Ara - the Encyclopedia of New Zealand:

Robert George Deans was born in Christchurch, New Zealand, on 19 February 1884, one of nine children of Catherine Edith Park and her husband, John Deans. His paternal grandfather, John Deans, was one of the Deans' brothers who settled in the Canterbury area in 1843; his father owned properties at Riccarton, Homebush and Waimarama. His mother's father, Robert Park, had been chief surveyor for Wellington province.

Robert attended Christchurch Boys' High School from 1897 to 1901. In his last year he was head boy, senior monitor, captain of the First XV and captain of the cadets. After leaving school he worked on the family's Riccarton property and played rugby for the school's old boys' club. In 1903 he first represented Canterbury at rugby. In 1904 and 1905 he played for the South Island, and in the latter year was selected as one of the three-quarters for the New Zealand team to tour Great Britain.

Deans stood six feet tall and weighed 13 stone 4 pounds: a splendid figure of colonial youth. He could run, handle, sidestep and swerve. He was a popular figure among his team-mates, and noted for his generosity towards them; they in turn respected his abstinence from tobacco and alcohol, and his deeply held religious views.

The team - known as the All Blacks - swept triumphant through the British Isles, defeating Scotland, Ireland, and England. Those who had prophesied that ill-disciplined colonials would lose more games than they would win had now to eat their words. Deans had an outstanding tour and scored 16 tries, but his most famous try was disallowed.

In December 1905, before a crowd of 47,000 singing Welshmen, the All Blacks played Wales at Cardiff. By all accounts the Welsh had the better of a fierce game and led 3-0 until the last moments. Then Billy Wallace, picking up the ball on his own side of halfway, 'made a brilliant dodgy run': 'I threw Bob Deans out a long pass which he took perfectly and raced ahead'. As the cover-defence threatened to cut him off at the corner, Deans cut back towards the posts - which would also make the conversion easier - and wrestled his way across the line. The referee, wearing collar and tie and street shoes, was still 30 yards away. The Welsh were there in force and hauled the flying three-quarter back. When the referee arrived he decided not to award the try.

Deans telegraphed his version of the event to the Daily Mail in London, and wrote about it in his occasional column in the Christchurch Press. The English papers endorsed his account; so did a touch judge and several Welsh players. Nobody denied, however, that the Welsh would have been unlucky to lose that day.

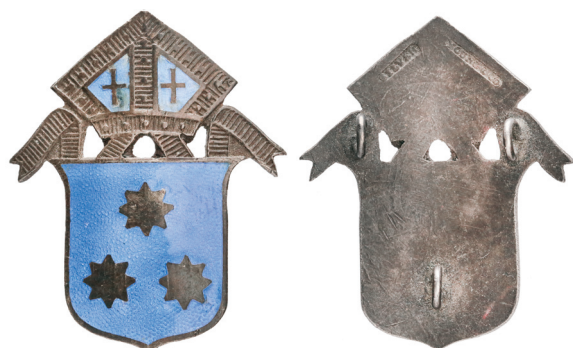

Interest in the tour in New Zealand had been intense. Premier Richard Seddon went out of his way to identify himself with its success, and arranged, at public expense, for the team to spend time in America and Canada on the way home. There Deans scored a further four tries.

Deans returned to farming at Homebush after the tour, and continued to play for Canterbury and the All Blacks; he captained Canterbury in 1908. On 30 September 1908 at the age of 24 he died of appendicitis at Homebush. He is commemorated by the Robert Deans Scholarship, awarded annually by his old school to the best all-round boy.
