Very fine although weakly struck and very rare.

$450

This dinar is a crude copy struck by the local kings of Bengal in imitation of the coinage of the Kushan King Kanbishka I. The striking of these was due to the growth of the trade routes with the Kushan lands in the north. By the fourth century A.D. these imitative types were replaced by Gupta coinage.

Samudragupta performed the ancient Asvamedha or horse sacrifice ceremony, in commemoration of his numerous victories. A free horse was let roam free and eventually slain, the ceremony although for centuries not used was revived by Samudragupta. This powerful graceful and realistic portrayal of the horse represents one of the greatest of the Gupta numismatic artistic achievements. The feeling of tension is also heightened by the cloth penons, shown vigorously flapping in a stiff wind. A similar specimen in our sale 49 (lot 2349) realised $3300. The market has increased considerably since that sale.

Makara is a sea-creature in Hindu mythology. It is generally depicted as half terrestrial animal (in the frontal part in animal forms of elephant or crocodile or stag, or deer) and in hind part as aquatic animal, in the tail part, as a fish tail or also as a seal. 'Makara' is a Sanskrit word which means 'sea dragon' or 'water-monster' and in Tibetan language it is called the 'chu-srin'. It also denotes a hybrid creature. In Hindu iconography, Makara is represented as the vahana ('vehicle') of Ganga the goddess of the river Ganges and the sea god Varuna. A row of makara may run along the wall of a Hindu temple, or form the hand rail of a staircase.

A cylinder seal is a small round cylinder, typically about one inch in length, engraved with written characters or figurative scenes or both, used in ancient times to roll an impression onto a two-dimensional surface, generally wet clay. Cylinder seals were invented around 3500 BC in the Near East, at the contemporary site of Susa in south-western Iran and at the early site of Uruk in southern Mesopotamia. They are linked to the invention of the latter cuneiform writing on clay cylinders. They were used as an administrative tool, a form of signature, as well as jewellery and as magical amulets; later versions would employ notations with Mesopotamian hieroglyphs. In later periods, they were used to notarize or attest to multiple impressions of clay documents. Graves and other sites housing precious items such as gold, silver, beads, and gemstones often included one or two cylinder seals, as honorific grave goods. This intricately carved cylinder seal occurred during this Uruk period.
